An interview with Emma Watson

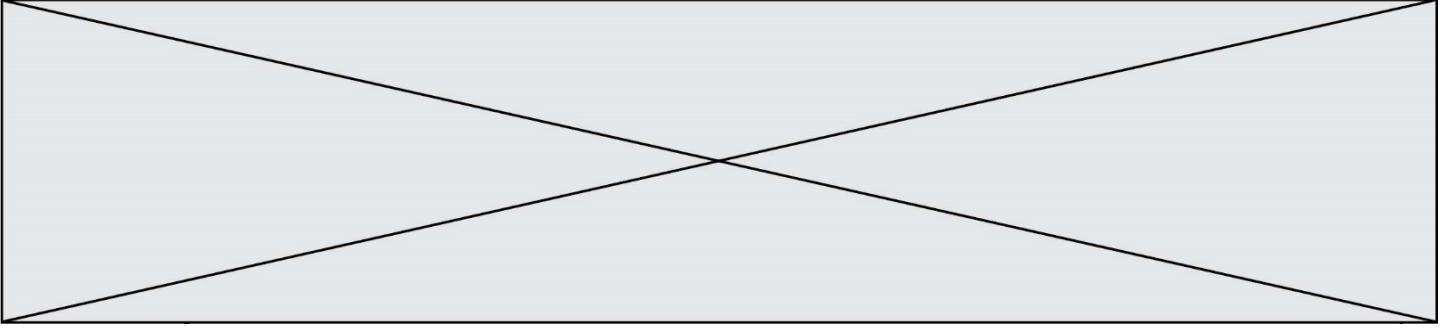

CHASTAIN: The speech you made at the U.N. for the HeForShe gender equality campaign, how did that come about?

WATSON: I've been working with an organization called CAMFED, run by this amazing woman named Ann Cotton, which provides scholarships and money for families that traditionally would only send their sons to school. So, Ann would find these girls, who were being taken out of school at 9, 10, 11, 12 years old, and try to help support them - not just through their secondary education, but with small business loans, all sorts of other things. I had been approached by a lot of charitable organizations, but I wanted to understand something from the inside out [...] and I wanted to work with a small organization. So, I took a trip to Zambia with a few friends, and we stayed in the school. I sat at the back of classes, and I spoke to the mothers of the daughters who were in the program and in the community, and I tried to understand the challenges. And then U.N. Women asked if I would be a Goodwill Ambassador for women and girls. I talk about it in the speech, but I remember watching Hillary Clinton's genius speech on women's rights, saying they were human rights, and they showed the audience, and there were almost exclusively women there. Why do we think that this conversation isn't something that all human beings need to hear? And they said, "We'd like you to make a speech." I thought, "Oh, god." I must have spent six months writing it, from journal entries that I'd been keeping since I was 12 or 13.

CHASTAIN: I remember how moving it was. I could feel that you were speaking from your heart. I keep coming back to the word authenticity ...

WATSON: It's one of my favorite words.

- Texte 2

The setting is the near future in a country called Gilead, an extremist, tyrannical replacement of the USA.

I raise my hand, knock, on the door of this forbidden room where I have never been, where women do not go. Not even Serena Joy comes here, and the cleaning is done by Guardians. What secrets, what male totems are kept in here?

I'm told to enter. I open the door, step in.

5 What is on the other side is normal life. I should say: what is on the other side looks like normal life.

There is a desk, of course, with a Computalk on it, and a black leather chair behind it. There's a potted plant on the desk, a penholder set, papers. There's an oriental rug on the floor, and a fireplace without a fire in it. There's a small sofa, covered in brown plush, a television set, an end table, a couple of chairs.

10 But all around the walls there are bookcases. They're filled with books. Books and books and books, right out in plain view, no locks, no boxes. No wonder we can't come in here. It's an oasis of the forbidden.

I try not to stare.

Margaret Atwood, The Handmaid's Tale, 1985

- b) Comment on the following question and explain Watson's feelings on the topic:
 "Why do we think that this conversation isn't something that all human beings need to hear?"
- Texte 2
 - c) After reading the text, what can you say about
 - the narrator?
 - the room?
 - d) "It's an oasis of the forbidden" (l. 13). Using the context, can you explain what this means?
 - e) This text reads like a diary. What reasons could be pushing the narrator to write this? (Give at least two reasons).

3. Expression écrite (10 points)

Vous traiterez en anglais et en 120 mots au moins, l'un de deux sujets suivants au choix :

- Sujet A

According to Hillary Clinton, a famous American politician, it is important to say that women's rights are human rights. Explain this point of view and give your opinion.

- Sujet B

In text 2, it is forbidden to read books. Write a speech to explain why this is not acceptable.
