It was, as far as she could imagine, a perfect life in a perfect place. Everyone in Shaker Heights felt this. So when it became obvious that the outside world was less perfect—as Brown v. Board caused an uproar and riders in Montgomery boycotted buses and the Little Rock Nine made their way into school through a storm of slurs and spit—Shaker residents, including Caroline, took it upon themselves to be better than that. After all, were they not smarter, wiser, more thoughtful and forethoughtful, the wealthiest, the most enlightened? Was it not their duty to enlighten others? Didn't the elite have a responsibility to share their well-being with those less fortunate? Caroline's own mother had always raised her to think of those in needs: she had organized Christmastime toy drives, had been a member of the local Children's Guild, had even overseen the compilation of a Guild cookbook, with all proceeds benefiting charities, and contributed her own personal recipe for molasses cookies. When the troubles of the outside world made their presence felt in Shaker Heights—a bomb at the home of a black lawyer—the community felt obliged to show this was not the shaker way. A neighborhood association sprang up to encourage integration in a particularly Shaker Heights manner: loans to encourage white families to move into black neighborhoods, loans to encourage black families to move into white neighborhoods, regulations forbidding FOR SALE signs in order to prevent white flight—a law that would remain in effect for decades. Caroline by then a homeowner herself with a one-year old—a young Mrs. Richardson—joined the integration association immediately. Some years later she would drive five and a half hours, daughter in tow, to the great March on Washington, and Mrs. Richardson would forever remember that day, the sun forcing her eyes into a squint, the scrum of people pressed thigh to thigh, the hot fog of sweat rising from the crowd, the Washington Monument rising far off in the distance, like a spike stretching to pierce the clouds. [...] "Remember this moment Elena."

The Invisible Segregation of Diverse Neighborhoods

Even in remarkably integrated towns, like mine, true equality remains elusive.

Today, segregation in America looks different than it did a generation ago. A multitude of studies show that neighborhood-level diversity is increasingly common and, correspondingly, that all-white neighborhoods aren't as prevalent. [...]

5 This change is a great thing, but we should be realistic about the limits of what it means. The word integration can conjure up images of racial harmony, interracial friendships, and classrooms as diverse as the neighborhood. But the reality is usually closer to what sociologist Derek Hyra calls "diversity segregation," or microsegregation. Even in diverse neighborhoods, divisions of race and class still exert
10 their power, and most studies of diverse neighborhoods, both long-established and currently gentrifying, show that cross-race relationships are often disappointingly limited.[...]

15 Although my neighborhood was majority-black for much of my life, most of my friends were white. The same held for most of my parents' friends. The kids I played with on my block were white. Diversity segregation of this kind manifested in other ways too. Mount Rainier is divided between single-family homes and the WWII-era brick garden apartment complexes that house two-thirds of the population. By the 1990s, these were overwhelmingly populated by people of color, while almost all of the white population lived in the single-family homes.

2. Compréhension de l'écrit (10 points)

a- Compréhension du texte 1

Give an account of text 1, in English and in your own words, focusing especially on the historical events mentioned, explain what happened in Shaker Heights at that time.

b- Compréhension du texte 2

Give an account of text 2, in English and in your own words, paying particular attention to how Mount Rainier has changed over the years.

c- Compréhension des deux textes

After your accounts of texts 1 and 2, show how they both illustrate “the invisible segregation of diverse neighborhoods”, in English.

3. Expression écrite (10 points)

Vous traiterez, en anglais et en 120 mots au moins, l'un des deux sujets suivants, au choix.

Sujet A

“Remember this moment, Elena.” You are Elena, aged 58. Write about that moment in your diary, focusing on what you remember, your feelings then and today.

www.history.com, The March on Washington

Sujet B

In the second text, the journalist uses the expression “Invisible segregation.” To what extent do you think the expression is relevant to describe the reality of the USA today? Give examples.
